Courtney Hollander is a member of the Tax, Securities and Business and Corporate Law Sections.

She focuses her practice on tax matters, including planning, compliance, controversy and collection in subject matters ranging from income, employment and sales tax matters for businesses, including nonprofits, to income and estate planning matters for individuals. As a trusted tax advisor, she has experience working on international, federal and SALT tax matters.

Courtney also works with financial services firms, including investment advisory firms and their representatives, on securities matters. She provides advice on compliance, exam and enforcement issues, ranging from initial registration to withdrawal. She also has experience with securities-related controversies, including FINRA arbitration. She is currently completing coursework to become an Investment Adviser Certified Compliance Professional (IACCP).

With her broad experience in tax and securities, Courtney also works with businesses on their corporate governance, succession planning, mergers and acquisitions and general transactional matters.
